VITAFER.

The Greatest of all Tonic Foods.

VITAFER is the essence of finest British milk, sterilized - concentrated and granulated - combined with the Glycero-phosphates of Sodium, Calcium, and Magnesium.

Vitafér is rich in body-building and nerve-restoring elements, the milk constituents form flesh and muscle, whilst the Glycero-phosphates revitalize the nerves and brain. This latter effect is due to Organic Phosphorus being present in the food in the particular form in which it occurs in the human body.

Vitafér is a genuine restorative, and not a mere transitory stimulant.

TREASURE ISLANDS.

Italian and Spanish Bunkers at Their Ill-Gotten Gains.

During the captivity of Napoleon on St. Helena the British Government, under the influence of a sudden access of precautionary zeal, sent a company of soldiers from the Cape to occupy the island of Tristan d'Acunha. They were recalled before the death of the Emperor, and all of them hailed with joy the end of their desolate exile, all with the exception of a certain Corporal Glass whose time had expired. "No asked," says the "Journal des Debats," "for him to stay. His example influenced another married soldier, and their two households proceeded to form a colony on this last outpost of civilization."

In 1893 the Galatin, with the Duke of Edinburgh on board, anchored off the island and was visited by the descendants of the soldiers, one of whom, a son of Glass, told the officers of the Galatin a queer story.

When the English detachment from the Cape reached the island they found a strange solitary being, a real Titan of Athens, who seemed much annoyed at having his solitude disturbed, and studiously hid himself. A watch was kept, and he was seen one night apparently carrying a heavy load. Two or three times afterwards he was noticed at the same job, and he always disappeared when he felt that his movements were perceived.

MURDER FOR GOLD.

One soldier, who was cleverer than the others, discovered the cave in which he lived. It was furnished with the debris of a shipwreck. Amongst other things, there was a pot full of Spanish dollars. At first the occupant of the cave tried to escape, but gradually he was humoured into sociability, and then declared himself to be Thomas Corri, an Italian, who was the only survivor of a shipwreck. Day by day more and more of his history came out, until the questioners got on the track of a battle between pirates, and the murder by this man of his surviving comrades in order to get sole possession of a hoard of treasure. This he began to hide when the Galatin arrived. He was just about to reveal the hiding place when—crash!—he was more than a match for his captors, and with him died the secret of his hoard. Try as they might, and they had plenty of time, Corporal Glass and his friends could never penetrate the secret.

SILVER AS A DOWRY.

There was another similar case in Peru. About 1600 a Spaniard, named Jose Salcedo, fell in love with an Indian girl. He proceeded to do a thing almost unheard of in those times: he married her. Out of gratitude, her mother revealed to him a vein of silver of unexampled richness. He worked it, and drew from it considerable wealth—too much for his happiness, for his opulence excited the cupidity of the viceroys, Count Lemos, who had him strangled with high treason, the penalty for which was death and the confiscation of all worldly goods. It was in vain that Salcedo demanded permission to appeal to Madrid, and offered to pay two ingots of silver daily during the fifteen months that must elapse before a reply was returned. The Count refused, and hung him in 1603.

But the butcher got small good out of it. The Indians, intent on avenging their friend, destroyed the works at the mine, filled it with water, and concealed the entrance so cleverly that it could never be discovered. Neither promises nor threats could extract their secret, which remains so to this very day.

Time was when disease was thought to be due to the direct influence of evil spirits, and exorcism
and magic were invoked to cast it out.
Science has taught us wisdom. The evil spirits exist still. We call them "Disease Germs," and they also must be cast out. Once lodged in the stomach or intestines, fever with its hallucinations, or biliousness with its aches
and pains, is the result.

ENO'S
FRUIT SALT

is the approved remedy for driving out disease-germs. Its action is quick and thorough. It cleans the intestines, rouses the torpid liver to new life, stimulates the mucous membrane to a healthy action, and cleanses and invigorates the whole digestive tract.

It may be safely taken at any time by young

It is very effective in the early stage of Diarrhoea
by removing the irritating cause.

Be prepared for emergencies by always keeping

UPSIDE DOWN IN THE AIR.

THE FLYING MARVEL.

Paris, Sept. 1.

The most daring feat yet accomplished
in all the adventures history of flying was performed at the Juvy aerodrome
this morning by M. Pegoud, the aviator, who a fortnight ago leapt from an aero-plane in flight and drifted to earth hanging from a parachute.

He succeeded this morning in flying for 400 yards upside down, with the landing wheels of the aeroplane in the air above him, himself hanging head downwards held
to his seat by an arrangement of leather straps. The experiment was one of those announced by M. Bleriot in The Daily Sketch this morning, and was intended to test the stability of the Bleriot in upland
and the degree of control that the aviator possesses over it.

M. Pegoud first rose to a height of 3,000 ft. He was followed through field glasses by the anxious eyes of M. Bleriot and the few friends he had invited to watch the secret experiment. From this height the aviator began his dive, but, instead of taking a spiral path or making the long gradual descent of the ordinary aeroplane, he plunged headlong downwards with so steep an incline that the aeroplane was soon absolutely perpendicular in the air and tail upmost. The motor being cut off, it was now simply falling by sheer force of gravity at a dizzy and ever-increasing speed
like a boy's dart weighted at the head.

The little knot of spectators broke involuntarily into exclamations of dread. It seemed as if in a few seconds this gigantic plummet, with its human burden, must crash to the ground.

Suddenly as they watched the tail of the monoplane was seen to incline out of the perpendicular towards the earth, but it was inclining the reverse way. The aero-plane was turning on its back, and now it left the vertical line of its fall and began to glide away on a volplane upside down,
the landing chassis on top, and M. Pegoud underneath, hanging head down, but still grasping the control wheel.

For 400 yards, during the space of fifteen seconds, the monoplane dived in this capsized attitude. Then, by a turn of his elevator, the inverted pilot once more regained the perpendicular, passed it, and glided off in a safe volplane.

M. Pegoud's course was the shape of a gigantic capital S in the air. It was as he passed along the middle stroke of the S that he was flying on his back.

"Peculiar, but not disagreeable," is how
M. Pegoud described the sensation of flying upside down after he had landed. "The machine did not pitch at all while it was reversed," he added.

EXPERIMENT TO BE REPEATED.

The experiment will be repeated tomorrow before some officers of the General Staff. M. Bleriot and M. Pegoud hope soon to try and turn a monoplane over sideways in the air. This is what might happen to a machine accidentally if one wing got into an "air pocket."

M. Pegoud, who qualified as an aviator less than a year ago, has already gained the reputation of being the most adventuresome pilot in France. He was the only man who could be found to test the Bleriot device for catching an aeroplane in flight
on a wire cable on which it comes to rest, suspended. He it was who tested M. Bonnet's parachute invention two weeks ago.

He is one of the chief pilots of the Bleriot works. About twenty-seven years old, short, thin, with a typical French face,
large, alert eyes, and a winsome, smiling,
dare-devil expression, his lips close tightly,
but they are always twitching in good humour. He turns a risk into a joke, and is, by a shrewd and a shrewd distance from death than most men would dare to venture at all.

MR. SHAW AND HIS NEW PLAY.

HIS LION A SURPRISE.

Mr. Bernard Shaw was chuckling quietly to himself on Saturday, says the Daily Sketch of September 1.
"Do others boom their plays? Then by all the axioms of Mr. Shaw's philosophy
"Andros and the Lion" must be kept dark.

When the curtain rises to-night at the St. James's Theatre it is the lion that everybody will look for. So great is the feeling of suspense about that lion that if it should roar before the curtain rises the Shavians will hug their sides to ecstasy.

The beast was gambolling about at rehearsal on Saturday, and the Daily Sketch "snapped it." Mr. Shaw looked on and chuckled.

Of course it will be no ordinary lion.
"What is its secret?" everybody is asking.
The lion refuses to exit its friend Andros.
Why? A wag who knows Mr. Shaw's idiosyncrasies suggested the answer to the Daily Sketch: "Because it is a vegetarian."
Some of us may be intensely interested in the Pagan, Empress of gladiators, some in their victims, the Christians who are going to expound Bernard Shaw's views on the Faith; but all will wait with tense curiosity the appearance of the King of Beasts as "G. B. S." represents him.

So far the extreme secrecy as to the salient points of the play preserved by the author, producer and artist ensures that its success shall not be endangered by the absence of the element of surprise.

In fact, surprise is its essence. "It would not be a play by 'G. B. S.' if it were not so; and chief of the novelties is likely to be the part played by Mr. Edward Sillwood, a 'skilled' representative of the beasts of the field, as the Lion.

G. B. S. VISITS THE CAGES.
The noble animal which is to typify the quality of gratitude is not a hurried creation. Mr. Shaw has been thinking him over for the past two years, and has paid a number of visits to the Zoo in London, Antwerp, and Hamburg.

He has imparted to the producer, Mr.
Granville Barker, the designer, Mr. Albert Rosenstein, and the actor, Mr. Sillwood, the result of his observations. "That result will be revealed to-night in a lioness monster as real as it is possible to make him."

Albeit his physical gaudy, in order that it may harmonize with Mr. Rosenstein's designs, decorative rather than realistic
though they are, will be of some service
in the play.

There is no question, however, but that his shaggy mane, his rolling, glaring eyes,
his red tongue, jutting out of his mouth,
his ponderous tail swishing, now, heavily,
now, good humouredly, from side to side,
will proclaim him the genuine monarch of the true Libyan tribe.

Doubtless Andros, the animal lover,
will christen him familiarly Billie or Jackie, and we have a suspicion that in the hands, or person, of Mr. Sillwood, who must now be regarded as having expert knowledge of the lion from the inside, he will belong to the same gallery as Nana
and the Crocodiles in "Peter Pan."

As to what part, however, he will play in Mr. Shaw's scheme of things, how far his roarings will convey a sense of the author's views on modern problems—all that is and must remain an inviolable secret until to-night.

We can say no more than that those connected with the production are convinced that Mr. Shaw has not been so inattentive as to introduce a peculiarly dramatic situation for the mere sake of creating a vulgar sensation.

An exercise of great interest, perhaps of great importance, is related in the Ethnische Tertillie. It appears that two years ago the printing house of Chaes Steiner, in Rappoltsau, made a show (advertising) flag for the Paris wareshow known as the Galerie Lafayette. Thereafter this house asked the printers to produce the flag on a small scale—about the size of an envelope—15 by 11 centimeters. Although it had to serve simply as an advertisement, the buyer insisted on a satisfactorily effective production. But it was for distribution amongst children; and the buyer would not pay the required price, and the printer declined the order. The Galerie Lafayette, applied to a Japanese house, which accepted the order at the buyer's price. Whether it got back the cost of the goods is still to be learned. The interest in the event, says a Berlin paper, lies in this delivery being the first appearance of Japanese prints as competitors on the European market—particularly against Alcco, the land of prints. The journal observes that should it turn out that the Japanese, with their cheap labour, can invade the European's market with their prints, the effect is going to be a very unpleasant one for the print works on this side.

A bridal pair in Pittsburgh the other day had an even worse time than some wedding couples get. During the jubilation after the wedding, the guests some misjudged jokers among the newly married man and wife and handcuffed them together with no fewer than three pairs of the "broclets." When supper time came it was only with difficulty that the unfortunate people were able to get any food, and it was then discovered that the guest who had locked the handcuffs had departed and could not be found.

ULSTER AND HOME RULE.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT TO BE FORMED.

LONDON, Sept. 24.
Unionist papers are devoting much space to the proceedings in Ulster.

Sir Edward Carson and General Richardson met the Unionist members of the House of Commons at Craig's House, Belfast, yesterday evening to discuss the establishment of a provisional government which it is expected will be announced at a meeting of five hundred delegates of the Ulster Unionist Council to-day.

On Saturday Sir Edward Carson inspected fourteen Belfast regiments, each 800 strong, with complete commissariat signalling and ambulance units.

General Richardson will be Officer Commanding, and will be accompanied by his staff.

A feature of the display will be the unfurling of the largest Union Jack in the world, and instead of a general salute there will be three cheers for the Union.

THE "PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT" IN SESSION.

Five hundred Ulster delegates met in Ulster Hall, Belfast. Sir E. Carson and Lord Londonderry drove up attended by a bodyguard of motor cyclists.

The Duke of Abercorn, Captain Craig and many peers were present. The Conference finally approved of the articles of the Provisional Government. Financial, Legal, Education, Customs, Excise, Post Office and Volunteer Force Committees were appointed.

The Standing Committee of the Ulster Unionist Council was appointed the Executive, with Sir E. Carson, chairman, and Mr. Campbell, Attorney-General for Ireland as Assessor.

Details would be published on the day Home Rule becomes law.

The largest Union Jack in the world was spread on the platform. Lord Londonderry opened the proceedings, which were conducted with closed doors, an official statement being supplied afterwards.

MORE "CARSONISM."

Sir E. Carson, addressing the Conference, said they must recognise that two hostile parties were face to face. If Home Rule were not carried there would be trouble in the south; if carried, trouble in the north. Great Britain must be the accepted arbiter between the parties. All the artifices of politicians and the subtleties of Radical Pressmen would never convert what was essentially loyalty into treason. If there was disgrace in the fight before them it was not a disgrace to Ulster but to the men who for their own base purposes had driven them to their present position. They had no right to take that step to-day, with its possible consequences, if they had exhausted every means to bring the Government to a real sense of the problem and its dangers.

BRITISH POSTAL EMPLOYEES AND THE GOVERNMENT.

REPLY TO THE RECENT STATEMENT.

LONDON, Sept. 24.
The Postal employees' manifesto, issued in reply to the statement made by the Post Office on the 22nd instant, denies that the recommendations of the Committee will involve an expense of one million pounds yearly, and declares that more than a decade will elapse before such an increase will be incurred. The manifesto goes on to say that it is mean and untrue to suggest that the recommendation will cause additional taxation, and exhorts the public to remember that the present discontent is not the work of the leaders, who counselled moderation but were overruled by an overwhelming vote of the members of the Parliamentary Committee.

At a conference of telegraph and postal clerks held at Liverpool it was resolved to instruct the Executive to immediately agitate for an all-round increase of wages commensurate with the increased cost of living, and failing a satisfactory reply within six weeks, the conference will be again convened to consider further action.

LIBERAL PRESS COMMENT.

The Liberal papers describe the proceedings as Sir Edward Carson's last desperate effort to smash the Home Rule Bill, and declare that the manufacturers of Belfast are alarmed at his reckless speeches, fearing that the labour troubles prevailing in Dublin may be echoed at Belfast, where the situation would be most serious with the populace armed with rifles and revolvers.

Mr. F. E. Smith has returned from Ulster to take up his duties as General French's staff at the manoeuvres as a lieutenant of Yeomanry.

THE LIBERAL PARTY'S ATTITUDE.

LATER.
The "Westminster Gazette" in a long statement, referring to articles in yesterday's "Evening Standard" and "Pall Mall Gazette," says that it may, of course be taken for granted that the political situation has been discussed by the public men who met at Balmoral and elsewhere, but there has been no meeting of the Cabinet and there is no necessity for any new decision of the Government, for Ministers are of the opinion that the door has always been, and is still open for the fullest deliberation on every aspect of Home Rule. The "Westminster Gazette" emphasises the cordial relations existing between the Nationalists and Liberals, and says that the latter will not countenance any action which will betray the cause of the Irish party. It concludes that if Unionists desire peace, they should find some method of dealing with the Ulster situation which would prevent a blocking policy of conciliation.

CHINESE AVIATOR.

Student Who Has Invented His Own Aeroplane.

There is in London just now, says the "Daily News," to hand, a young engineering student from China who has in two short years not only mastered the art of flight, but has invented a new type of airplane for use in his native country. Mr. T. K. Wong, who obtained his pilot's certificate at Brooklands two weeks ago, and is about to return to Peking, explained to a "Daily News" representative some of the details of the "dragon fly," as he has named his new machine. It is a tractor biplane, in which the principles established by the research work of the National Physical Laboratory have been embodied. The plane slopes slightly backwards, an improvement which Mr. Wong says gives increased power of control. The machine, owing to the absence of skilled workers in aviation construction in China, has been made as simple as possible, and for the same reason, an English engine, the Ingersoll, has been adopted, the French makes being considered too delicate for use in China.

Mr. Wong, who is a Chinese Government student at London University, has previously studied in Australia, Africa, and Ceylon. He has flown during the past year at Brooklands and Brooklands on a "Bristol monoplane" as well as on three or four makes of biplanes.

"My present machine has no bamboo work in it," he said, "but in China it will be largely used. You see, in England there are probably less than a dozen men who know how to work with bamboo, which is Nature's own tubing. In China, on the other hand, there are countless skilled artificers in bamboo work, and children on bamboo frames were made there many centuries ago."

ALEXANDER WILSON.

(From Our Scottish Correspondent.)

EDINBURGH, August 26.
This week was celebrated the centenary of the death of Alexander Wilson, the Paisley weaver poet and American ornithologist. Wilson, (writes "M" in an article in the Glasgow Herald) was destined for the kirk by his parents, who came of Covenanting stock. As he himself wrote later in typical verse:—

His parents saw with partial fond delight Unfolding genius crown their fostering care,
And talked with tears of that enrapturing
night
When clad in sable gown, with solemn
air,
The walls of God's own house should echo
back his prayer.

The boy was sent to the Grammar School of his native town. Unhappily his mother died while he was in his tenth year, and his father, having soon contracted a second marriage with a widow who had a family of her own, was unable to continue his son's education. At the age of thirteen, therefore, Alexander was apprenticed as a weaver, and completed his term of service in 1782—an event which he celebrated in his first recorded verses:—

Be't lent to 't the world in rhyme,
That w' right meik's work an' toll;
For three lang years I've set my time,
Whiles fausted w' the hazel oil.

For the next three years Wilson continued at the loom, sometimes at Paisley, sometimes at Leith, and later at a Queensberry. The ordinary life of a weaver was uneventful and in 1786 he began those wanderings in the open air which were only to end with his life. As a pedlar he traversed Fife and the Lothians. In 1789 he set out on his rounds with the special purpose of securing subscribers for a volume of poems which only appeared in the following year. But the poetical pedlar, as his interesting "Journal" records, met with little success, and he had to settle down once more to the loom at Leith. In 1791 an opportunity occurred for another visit to the capital. At that time there existed in Edinburgh a debating society called the Forum, or the Pantheon. Weekly debates were conducted, and it was announced that on April 14, 1791, the question to be discussed would be, "Whether have the exertions of Allan Ramsay or Robert Ferguson done more to honour Scottish poetry?" Hearing of the proposed debate, Wilson purchased a copy of the proposed debate, and in a week in order to save enough money for his expenses, and in a poem entitled "The Laurel Disputed," maintained the claims of Ferguson. Though he was unsuccessful in winning the prize, he twice recited his own verses before the Pantheon Society, and his favourable reception probably induced him to bring out a second edition of his poems. This second venture proved as unsatisfactory as the first. Nor is the cause far to seek.

Though Wilson's somewhat numerous biographers profess to find great merit in his verses, the English poems are vitiated by the poetic diction of his favourite authors, Pope, Goldsmith, Young, and Blair, and even in his Scottish poems he hardly ever shows himself at home in the vernacular. Only in "Waley and Meg" written in 1792 and published anonymously, did Wilson write verse which secured for him a measure of contemporary popularity and a place among the minor poets of his time. The story in the old one of the taming of a wild man, and his scolding wife. Waley takes his wife by the simple expedient of pretending to take the king's shilling. In her grief Meg promises to make all amends, and the poem ends with the joyful reconciliation of the couple.

The poem had an instant success. 100,000 copies were sold in a few weeks. Four chapbook versions in the British Museum testify to its popularity. Various localities claimed to be the home of the original Watty and Meg, but the question is supposed to have been solved by a certain James of the Seelhill of Paisley, on reading the poem exclaimed:—"Dye ken what lang Sandy Wilson, the poet has done? He has poem'd us." Nothing gave Wilson greater satisfaction than the fact that it was accepted to Burns. The life of an actor, weaver and his scolding wife. Burns heard a hawker cry "Watty and Meg, a new ballad by Robert Burns," he exclaimed:—"I would make your pluck a hawker if it were mine."

The year 1792 saw other efforts of his. By this time the weaving community of the west was seething with discontent aroused by the new doctrine of the French Revolution as interpreted by Thomas Paine. To stem the rising tide of disloyalty the governing classes began to issue level addresses. Among others was that of the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, and in an "Address" to that body Wilson gave expression to the feelings of his fellow democrats with a force and directness which make the poem a valuable historical document:—

The Rights of Man is now well known,
And read by many a hand;
For Tommy Paine the bulk has penned,
And lent the courts a lender.
It's like a keeking-class to see
The craft of kirk and statesman;
Add w' a hand and easy gyle,
Gild hain the birkie to them
As hand on day.

None of the political societies of the period were so unengaged as the Paisley Friends of the People, and Wilson seems to have been an active member. Unfortunately, in exposing what he took to be the grievances of his class, he brought himself within the pale of the law by coarse invectives on one individual, and he was sentenced on one occasion to hury the offending poem in front of the Sheriff Court-Room. As the trial of the Political Martyrs showed, Scotland was no safe place for an admirer of Tom Paine, and in 1794 Wilson sailed for America, then considered the land of ideal liberty for fervent democrats.

While in New York, he writes, "I had the curiosity to call on the celebrated author of the 'Rights of Man.' He lives at Greenwich, a short way from the city. In the only decent apartment of a small, indifferent looking frame house, I found this extraordinary man, sitting wrapped in a nightgown, the table before him covered with newspapers, with pen and ink beside him. Paine's face would have excitedly mirrored the character of Burdett, but the presence of his eyes bespoke the man of genius and intelligence and of the world. He complained to me of his inability to walk, an exercise he was formerly fond of."

It was in America that Wilson, in spite of his unimpressive appearance, was the same man who had been a member of the London Society for the Abolition of the Slave Trade. When he landed he had no letters of introduction, and nothing but a few borrowed shillings in his pocket. From New York, where he first set foot in the New World, he sailed for Philadelphia. On the road he was especially attracted by the beauty of the plimings of the birds, and he records that red-headed woodpecker was the first that fell to his gun. After trying various occupations, he settled down as a teacher in Pennsylvania. But the roving instinct was still strong, and on one occasion he tramped 500 miles to visit some relatives in New York State. About the beginning of 1802 he was appointed head of a school at Kingoes, near Philadelphia. There he made the acquaintance of William Bartram, whose father had been pronounced by Linnaeus to be "the greatest self-taught botanist in the world." His son not only developed the botanical garden he had inherited but took a deep interest in every department of natural history. Another near neighbour was a Mr. Lawson, an engraver. In the congenial company of these friends Wilson's genius at last found its true bent. From Bartram he learnt to turn to account the knowledge of bird life he had acquired in his many wanderings, while Lawson taught him the art of drawing and engraving. Wilson soon became imbued with the idea of writing an ornithology of the United States, illustrated by his own drawings, and the project took definite shape when in 1806 he was appointed assistant editor of "Rees's Encyclopedia" at a liberal salary. His employers undertook to publish Wilson's work, and in 1808 the first volume of the "American Ornithology" appeared. For the next five years Wilson worked with unremitting toil to complete the remaining volumes. He died in 1813 of dysentery brought on by over-exertion. It had lived to complete seven volumes, and he had the satisfaction of being acknowledged during his own lifetime as one who had brought honour and fame to his country.
